Fun night! The skies were magnificently clear at Halibut Point State Park. We saw Jupiter, Saturn, M31, M15, M29, M42 (beautiful!), and more!

JTAHR also held a special tour throughout the park, figuring the trails as we traveled with the expert guidance of Eli! The oceanside view was breathtaking! I got lost in the stars, and I could've stayed there ~~for~~ for hours...

I found saturn really quickly today! I love this telescope and the observatory so much. It feels so lived-in. It's so... human. I love it. I still can't believe they actually let us in here. Seriously this school is wild! Between the loomis-michael and widdern studies I can barely believe my own life sometimes. Harvard's not perfect by any means, but if you know where to look, it's really freaking cool. Whoever is reading this, I hope you have a beautiful life!

-Stes

The sky is remarkably clear tonight. I know the Boston light pollution is making the night sky all gross, but, I mean, just look at the night sky. It's so deep. I don't know what color to call it. Navy is the wrong word. It feels greener, somehow, but that's likely the red light messing with my vision. The sky's the same color but I perceive it differently. Just like this black ink seems to have a faint turquoise sheen. I will never be able to capture this color any other way - it's an emergent property of circumstance. That's why, I think, the night sky is so beautiful. It's not just the ~~stars~~ hex color and some stars. It's the cool night air, the ~~way~~ creeping sleepiness, the way the stars slide in and out of view of the opening as I move ~~up~~ around the observatory. Some things are uncommunicable. No picture or description can ever do things justice. You'll just have to try it for yourself.

~~Apparat~~ Apparently, one of the screws from the telescope fell off when we were trying to rotate (we didn't do anything unusual, but it's funny how it happened).
Nope it gets fixed soon. :))

11/22/21 Kidus Negerse

The focus knob on the finder scope fell out... found the screw and washer to fasten it in place on the ground. Put it back. JOB COMPLETE

Please don't touch the finder scope! And thanks Ishan for quickly letting us to this.

And PLEASE set aside cords neatly! I walked in on such a mess :C

Happy Thanksgiving!
